Prevent Child Abuse West Virginia presents
"Circles of Caring: What Child Abuse Prevention Looks Like"

"Empathy can't be taught, but it can be caught." - Mary Gordon, founder of Roots of Empathy, a school-based program designed to foster compassion

A child's capacity for empathy can further be encouraged when parents model empathetic behavior themselves. When parents treat other people with compassion, selflessness and a lack of judgment, children copy those behaviors.

In the beginning, Center for the Study of Social Policy was seeking a strategic, feasible approach to child abuse prevention that was:

- systematic,
- national,
- reached large numbers of young children, and
- would have impact long before abuse or neglect occurred

ROLES Early care and education programs can serve several critical roles for young parents:

- as a primary source of information and support for young families
- as a gateway to outside services or supports such as health or mental health services, transportation, and even education, housing and jobs.
- as the key early warning system when families or children are in trouble.

Hypothesis was that early care and education programs could be central because they offer:

- Daily contact with parents and children
- Uniquely intimate relationship with families
- A universal approach of positive encouragement and education for families
- An early warning and response system at the first sign of trouble

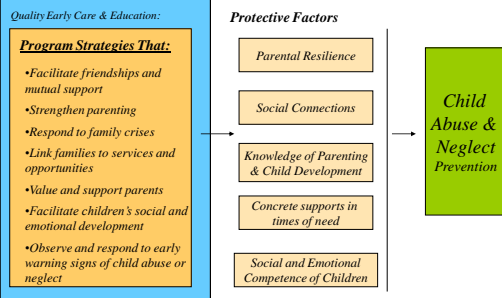

The “New Normal”

- Child abuse and neglect prevention becomes building healthy families
- Early childhood programs support families and protect children
- Child welfare and other state systems support the developmental needs of young children
- State policy and funding sustain the work of Strengthening Families

BRAIN DEVELOPMENT

The foundation to a good beginning

“If there’s anything more fundamental than a decent start in life, I wonder what it could be.”

— David Hamburg, President of Carnegie Foundation of New York
